

*Kate Stephens
Desert Narrative,
Circa 1930*

SAN DIEGO NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM

SAN DIEGO NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM

A desert scene's episode

Our long expedition was nearing completion our faces were turned homeward, The horses tired with the long hard work, hard fare lagged slowly over the arid way no effort was made to hasten them Frank was too familiar with the desert to urge where it was unnecessary the short twilight was near at hand.

I knew from Frank's behaviour and the horses also that camp was not so very far off so all four of us quiet, tired, worn out slowly and quietly watched, for the camping place it was ~~my~~ <sup>the</sup> first time I had ever been at this place and my interest was suddenly awakened when I saw before us a steep hill probably half or a mile of almost straight steep rough road but what made us all pick up interest was, at the base of the hill a tiny spark of fire flickered. The horses raised their heads and slowly pricked up their ears I set up straight forgetting my slumping attitude. someone must be down there I remarked yes said Frank and it must be someone that knows the desert I was not surprised at this remark to often had he made some such remark where I could see nothing his eyes and knowledge explained a whole episode I tried to imagine how the person down there should know the desert so after a little said how do you know that it is the last place they can get wood. ~~he said~~ no more was said we watched that tiny flare showing snow <sup>then</sup> disappearing again behind some larger rock or bend of the road we tramped on slowly and the twilight slowly envelo ped us at last the bottom of the hill and almost darkness the camp fire quite near but a little off the road. a form came out of the darkness and caught hold of the rail of the seat next to me "Have you got a little water a tired voice said.

Trenk stopped the horses and leaned over to me and said why it is Mr carpenter with it the face peered over to him and then leaving hold of the wagon rail threw his arms over his head and almost shouted why its Mr Stephen its Mr Stephen's I am all right now I am all right now <sup>its Mr Stephen's</sup> ~~Trenk~~ ~~jumped~~ <sup>tried the</sup> rails to the ~~dark~~ <sup>border</sup> slowly ~~stepped~~ <sup>slipped</sup> slowly down and the two men walked off leaving me on the wagon. I knew it was all right now so slowly climbed out and <sup>hobbling</sup> <sup>along</sup> <sup>to</sup> the back of the wagon my stiff limbs could hardly hold me up I tried to loosen the tail board to get some of the things for getting supper at least. There was a fire already started it was but a minute or two when the two men came back and Frank took the canteen of water and they both went off again I could do no more the quile bot and bot with pots and pans were too heavy for me to lift to get ~~them~~ up a few things I made up the fire and back they came the man telling excitedly Frank saying nothing the quile bot down and some Quail skinned and coffee on supper was soon ready my curiosity would have been keen had I not been so tired but it appeared that this man had walked many miles to take home a sick horse the horse could go no further and had fallen down this man a workless had given his last drop of water to the horse he was about nine miles from home no water dead tired and expected to have to walk home next day thru the hot desert he was tired to start now and would not leave the horse can you wonder at his excitement at seeing my trunk the very sight of him removed all worry he was saved he knew that whatever could be done for the sick horse would be done and that a supper was right there and that tomorrow a horse on the wagon home was his. Boonits Quail coff tea, beans, vanilla, beds made a last look at the dying horse and sleep sweet sleep such as can only come from an all days ride The gravelly ground might be heard for my asking bones and the stars shingoo bright simply faded out of my ken as I lost myself asleep in the open desert.

Frank and Kate Stephens 3746 Park Blvd.
 San Diego, California

SOUTHERN TITLE & TRUST COMPANY
 940 THIRD STREET
 SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA

SAN DIEGO NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM